

When user wants just to have a look on the site or artworks, they usually press the category button (here it could be any of kinds of general categories such as "paintings", "sculptures", "prints", etc.)

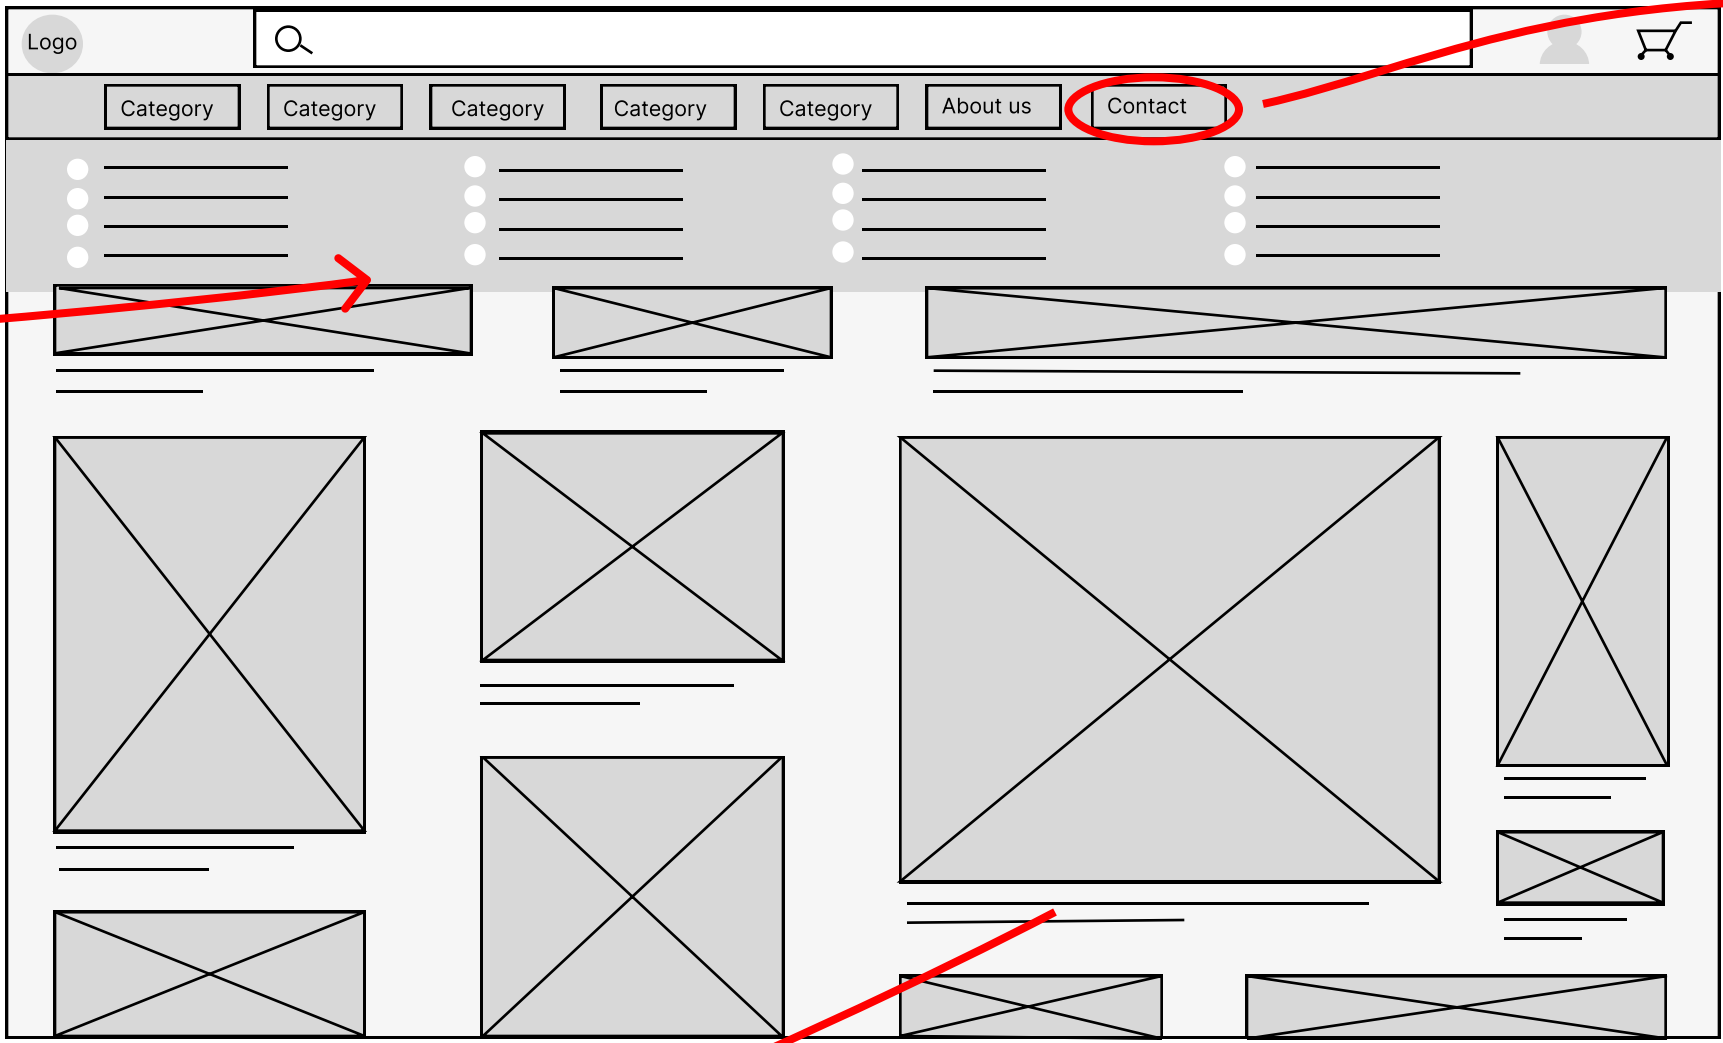

First page when you open the site

Home Page

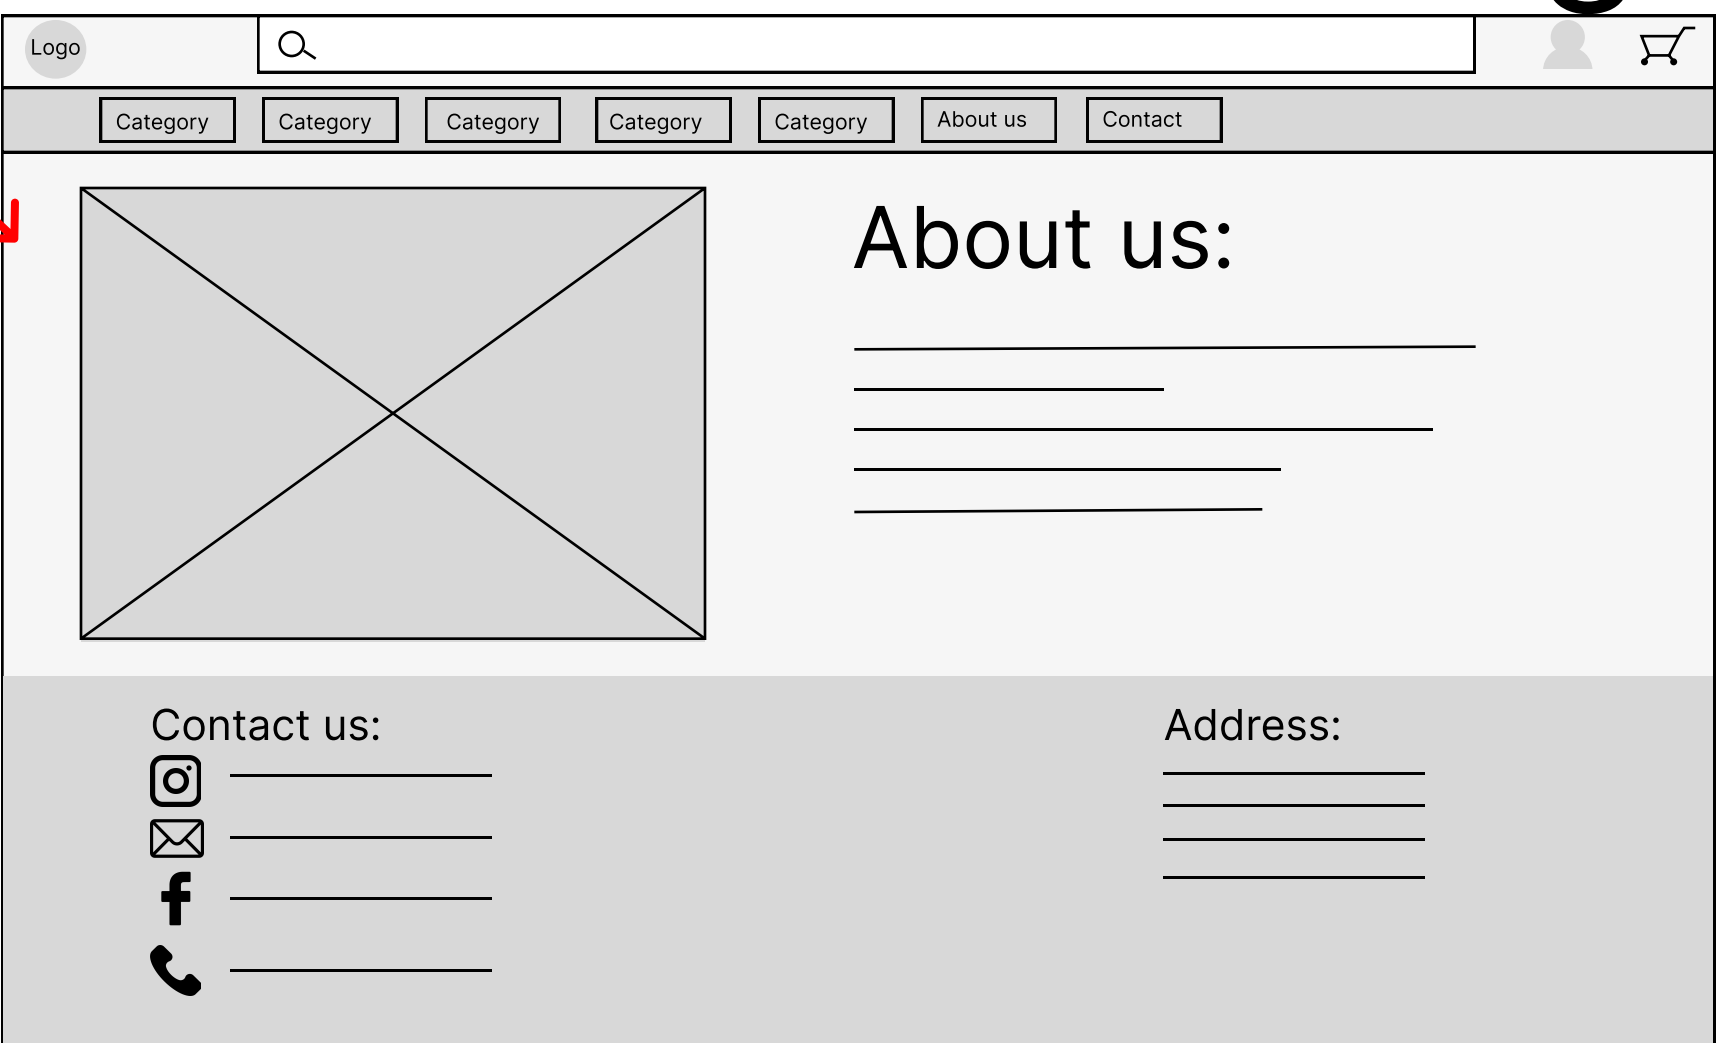

Then menu gets open with more detailed options which user could choose himself and look through art pieces that website found for him

Filter Page

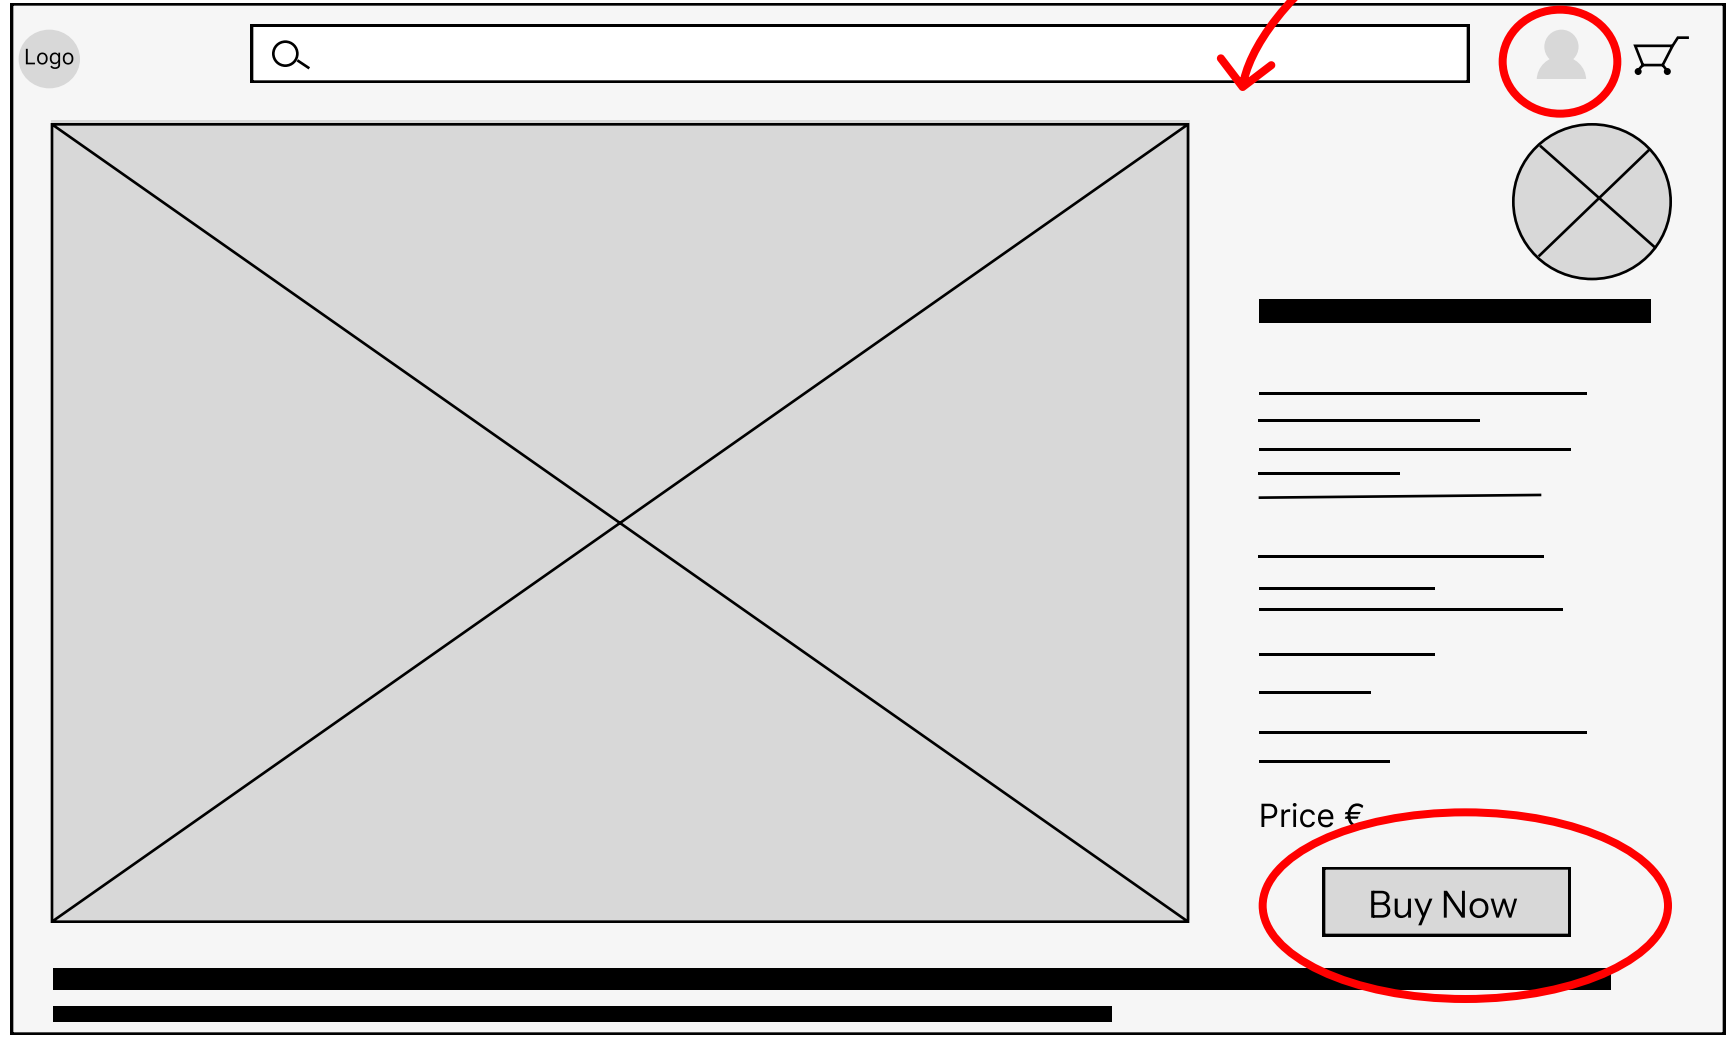

When customer found whatever he likes he will press the button on the picture which will open the page of that artwork

About us/Contact Page

Whenever customer will want to found out more about us or contact us he can press either "About" or "contact us" buttons in the filter bar on top of the website

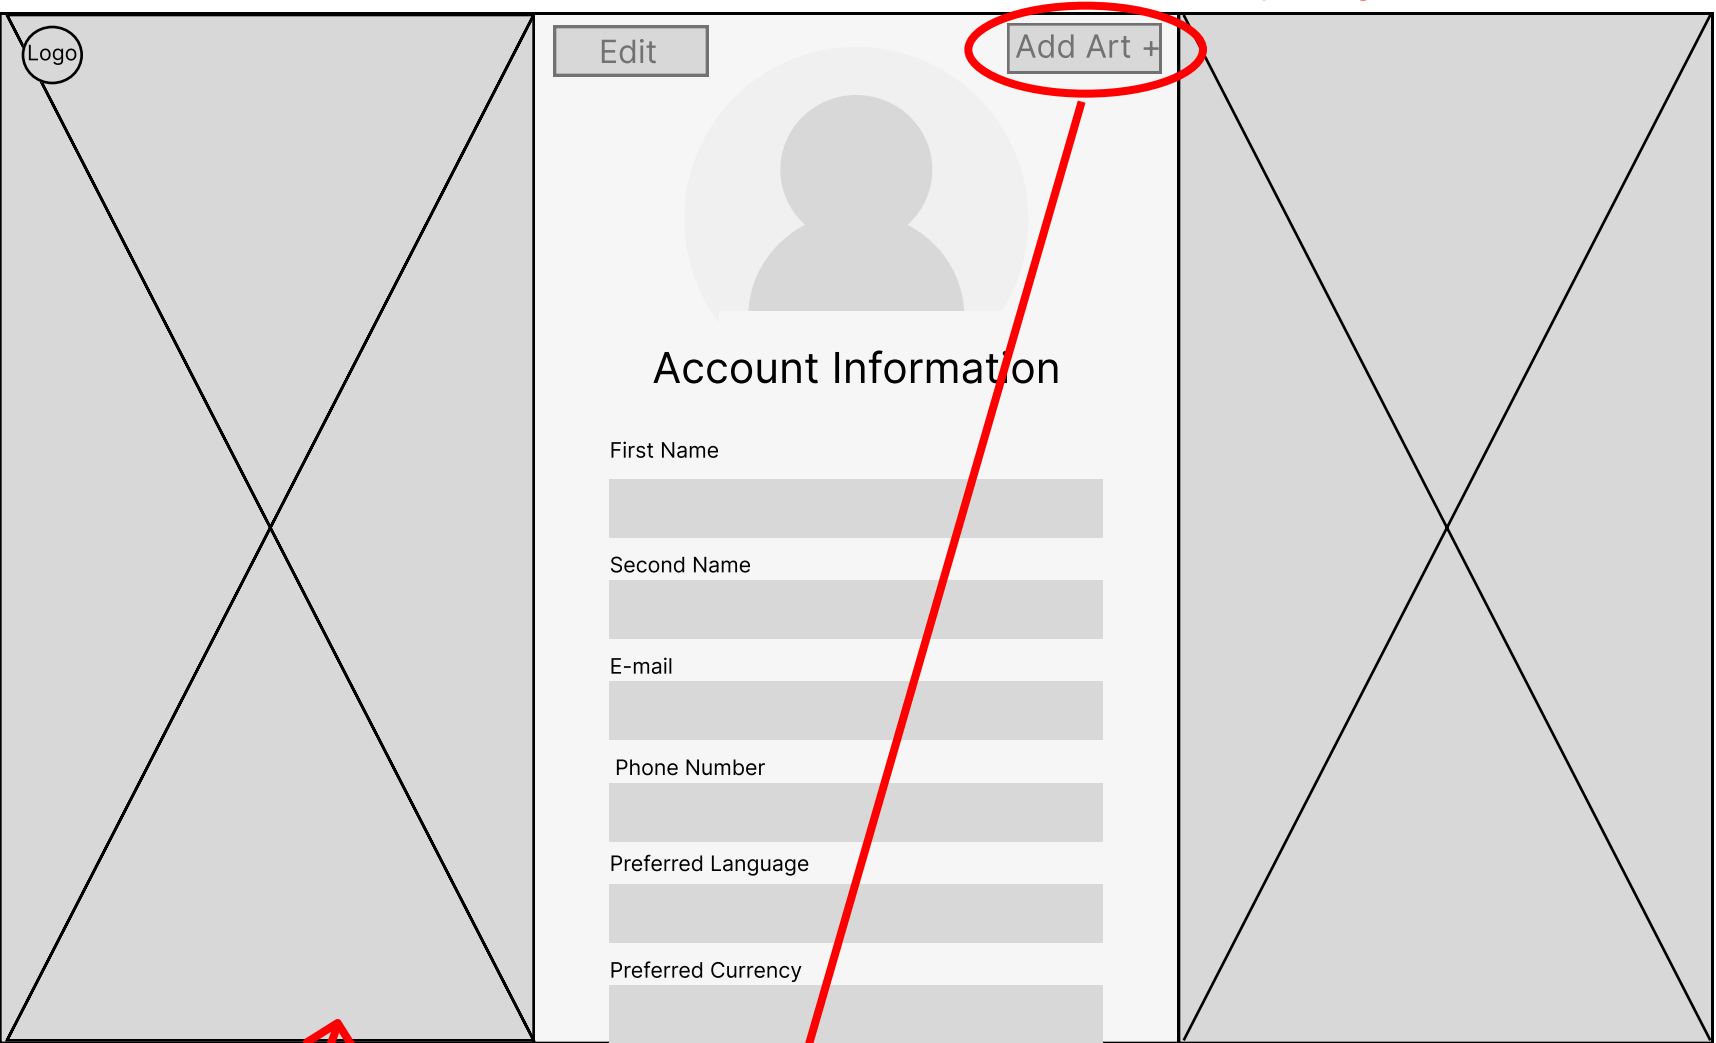

Artwork Page

After he made a decision on artwork and customer wants to buy it he can press "buy now" and it'll automatically sent him to the account page. Or customer could press the profile icon any time to create the account or change the information

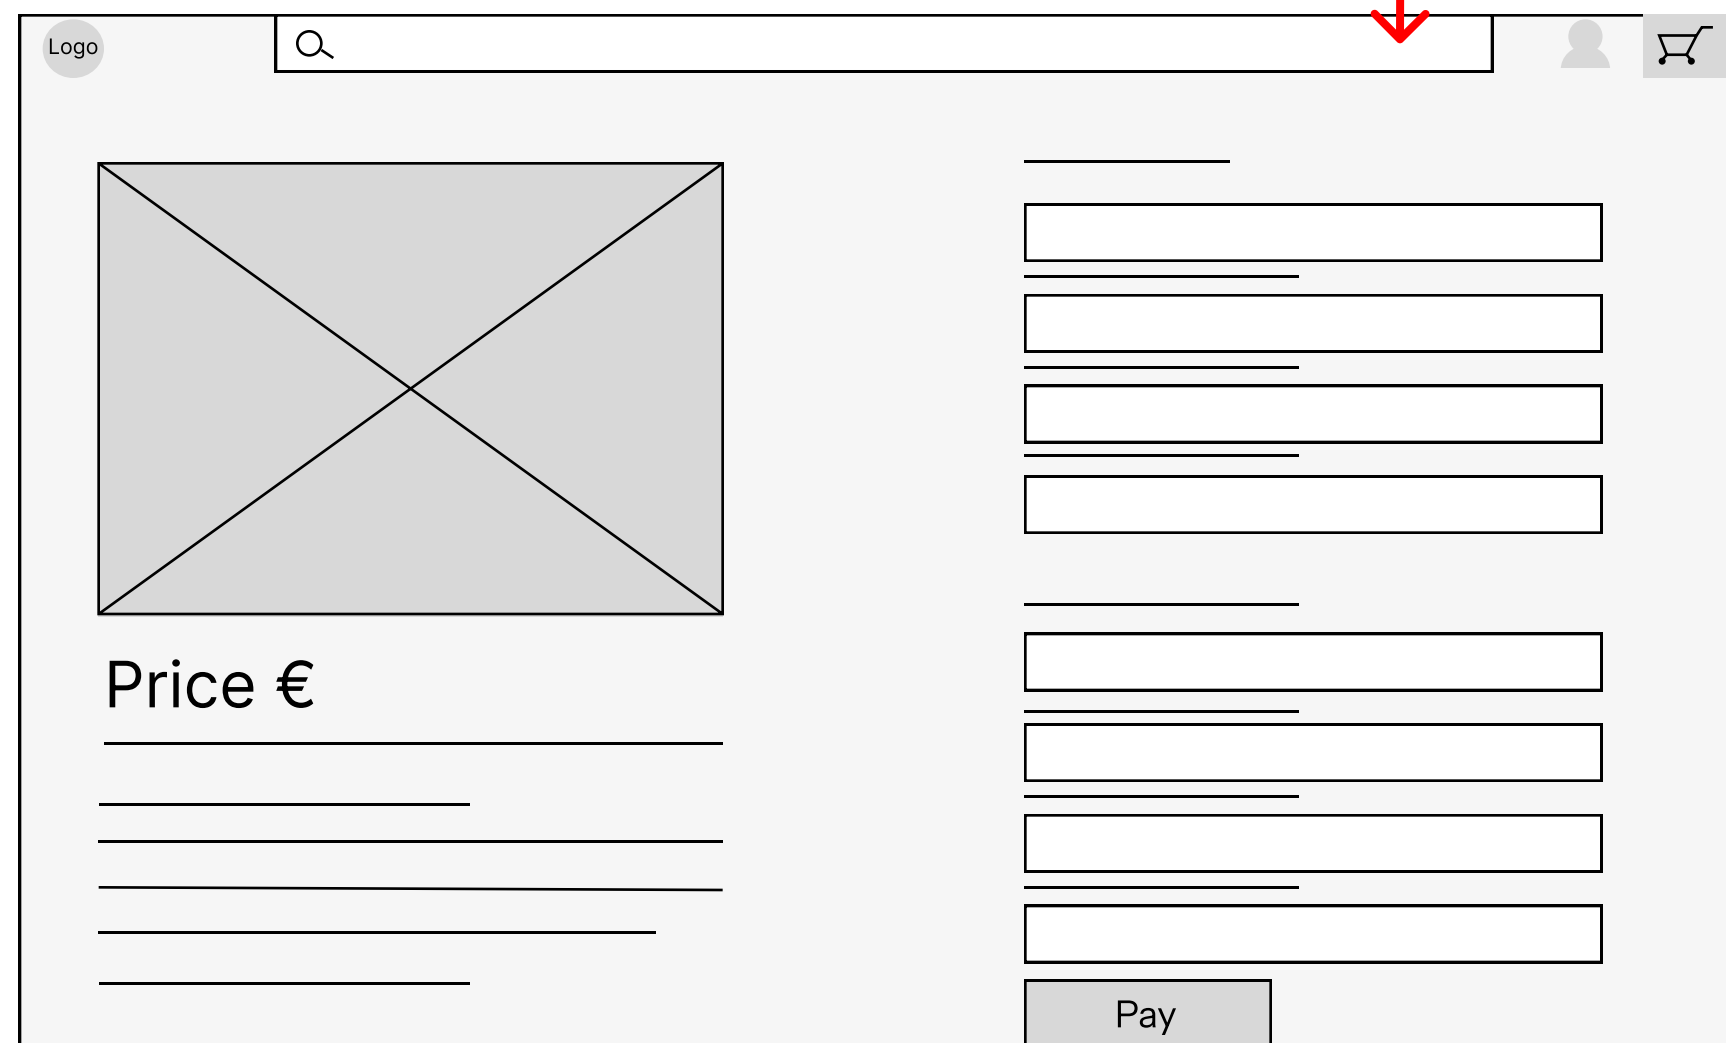

Or if the customer already has his account then the web site will transfer automatically to the checkout page

Account Page

If the visitor will want to post his artwork so he could sell it he can press the "Add art +" button and fill the form for posting it on the website

Checkout Page

For returning to the homepage the user could press on the logo sign and the site would transfer the customer to the home page

Form for selling Page

